It's an easy matter to start a rumor, but once started it soon becomes an irresistible force.

No one will know the full truth about the Rowe case until Rowe tells it. Let's wait till Rowe returns.

A man's chance is all the Negro of America is asking; and he is less than a man who would deny him this.

The managers of the picture shows in the East end should put the ban on this vulgar, boisterous class who have no respect for ladies. Some day this class of ruffians will cause serious trouble which might as well be averted.

The Negroes of Tulsa pay the sum of $3,900.00 to The Tulsa World-Sun papers annually, probably more; and this paper never overlooks an opportunity to show their appreciation by open insults to the race. In the language of the immortal Shakespeare, "What fools ye mortals be."

A new planet in the blazing solar system of Negro Journalism has reached our desk bearing the title head of "The Washington Sun," published at the national capital by J. Finley Wilson, et al. The paper is less than a month old but bids fair to become of a national character in a short while. We congratulate the publishers of this very creditable journal for the splendid showing made in so short a time and commend the business men of that city for the liberal support they are giving the paper.

One of the best signs of any community's worth as to its citizenship, in fact the very best sign, is a well printed and home patronized newspaper. Taking the "Sun" as a criterion for the Negro citizenship of the nation's capital, from any point of view, the race in that city is keeping pace with the times. We wish the "Sun" long life and prosperity.

The unfortunate shooting of Detective Ed Rice by Douglas Rowe Monday morning is regretted by all good citizens, black and white.

That there was no occasion for the shooting no one can question. But this incident has convinced the outside world that the better class of the people of Tulsa, regardless of color are opposed to crime. The Negroes of this city who volunteered to go out with the posse to uphold the law and see that impartial justice was done set a precedent that should be followed by Negroes everywhere under such circumstances. Even the father of Rowe offered to assist the officers in bringing his boy to justice, but of course insisted that he be protected from mob violence. We do not believe the officers of this city would tolerate mob violence. They are all considered true, brave men, who are fearless in the performance of their duty.

Certainly the better class of Tulsa's citizens, white and black, would oppose murder by a mob with the same patriotic spirit that they oppose murder or any other crime, by an individual. Rowe will be captured and brought to justice and there will be no mob violence.

LOST RELATIVES WANTED

Tulsa, Okla., May 7, 1914.

Estella L. Lowery wants to know the whereabouts of her sister, Mrs. Joannier McCahey. When last heard of twenty years ago, she was on H. P. Roger's farm twelve miles south of Maryanna, Ark. Joannia Goosby before she married her husband name Joe McMurrey; her mother and father name Lang Goosby, and mother Fannie Goosby. He did go by the name Joe Spencer a good long while. These are some of the children's names: Catherine, Lewis, Kizzie, Tillie, Ora, Phill, Essie and James.

Many conflicting stories were published in the newspapers. In less than 24 hours later Rowe, according to newspapers Rowe had been seen in nearly every town within a radius of 50 miles from Tulsa, but up to this time he has not been captured.
